Anisotropic hydrogen-bonding motifs of (2)J(4H) coupling constants in cis-vinyl halides as a key to understanding hydrogen bond motifs and their differences in the solid state. Water-assisted hydrogen-bonding motifs of cis-vinyl halides are identified by taking into consideration the (2)J(4H) coupling constants. Motif structures related to that of α -butyrolactone were found, and their typical bond lengths and angles were determined by X-ray diffraction measurements. There are two characteristic hydrogen bonds of cis-vinyl halides, namely, a quasi-1:1-bifurcated type and a 1:1-bifurcated type, which could be largely enhanced by water molecules. On the basis of the typical bond lengths of cis-vinyl halides, the hydrogen-bond length was estimated. The hydrogen-bond length of a quasi-1:1-bifurcated motif is shorter than that of a 1:1-bifurcated motif. The drastic difference in the hydrogen-bond length is attributed to the anisotropic nature of the hydrogen-bonding, which results from the different orientation and orientation distribution of the hydrogen-bonded molecules in the two motifs. Our strategy for elucidating the hydrogen-bonding motifs of cis-vinyl halides is expected to lead to a basis for eluc 09e8f5149f
