o Bring your website to the top of the internet in just 3 simple steps!Speaking of being active... Rebecca via Fabulous Fitness on Twitter posted the following photo to her hundreds of followers yesterday. I can't believe it's been a year since she hit the half marathon. That girl ROCKED it. Watching her train last year was an absolute pleasure. Many a time I'd catch her after a long run or a class, and she'd be burning away with energy as she discussed her day and the great running she'd been doing. If you follow her on Facebook, you'll see her go into great detail with her clients about the workouts she's doing. I hope you can find her on Twitter. She's always a great source of inspiration as she shares her thoughts and her fitness and shares the fitness community with you. So, go check her out on Twitter: @Rebecca_Fitness. Also, I'd like to share something that a friend of mine, Melissa, wrote about her fitness inspiration. It's an open letter to me. Dear Me, Over a year ago I signed up for my first half-marathon. I'd never run more than 5k before that. I looked up books, read blogs, waited until I had a little more time and peace and quiet, then I ran. I was scared. I'd watched people run with over 100+ friends, with moms and children cheering, laughing and crying, and I was the only fat middle-aged woman. Then I started training. I started running two days a week, 4-6 miles at a time. I ran outside when it was cold, but when the sun was out, it was a no-brainer. I met other runners of all ages, shapes, sizes, and I kept up with them, we encouraged each other, we encouraged each other when we fell. I watched the scenery as it became familiar, I trained. And I began running through my problems. I ran through being tired and having time off. I ran through being scared of the unknown. And you know what? I ran through every single one of those things, and I beat all of them. I ran through being scared, or thinking about being afraid. I ran through being tired, and I kept running. I ran through thinking I wasn't
