Two effects of sodium: activation of Na+, K(+)-ATPase of rat liver homogenate and inhibition of the enzyme in membrane preparation are shown.

The presence of 10 mM Na+ in incubation medium causes about twofold increase of the activity of ATPase (in the presence of Na+ and K+), while its presence in the incubation medium when ATPase reaction is performed is much less potent and activating effect of Na+ is realized only after 10 min of incubation. Since the ATPase reaction was carried out at pH 8.4 in the presence of Na+, Na+ and K+ an increase of the activity of the enzyme in this pH range is not caused by Na+ activation of the enzyme. In the experiments with Na+, K(+)-ATPase in liver tissue homogenate and membranes, the enzyme activity decreases in 10 min in the presence of Na+ in the incubation medium. But the presence of Na+ in incubation medium has no effect on ATPase activity in the control liver homogenate. Introduction of Na+ into homogenate, by the addition 3e33713323
