Accompanied by DVDs of what used to be a different age, a different country or a different way of living, we share our lack of words and try to describe the feelings they held so dear. A relative sense of calm prevails while we inevitably feel the deep and imaginary path of nostalgia bound with our past. "In front of the house, there was a garden of coffee beans. I would love to have lots of my friends come to visit me there. I'm very thirsty."Introduction ===== Myasthenia gravis (MG) is a neuromuscular autoimmune disorder. It presents as weakness of a variable severity in ocular, bulbar, and limb muscles. MG occurs predominantly in females. Extensor compartment syndrome (ECS) of the lower leg is a rare complication of MG. ECS is commonly seen in the diabetes mellitus population. Diabetes mellitus is the most common etiology of ECS. The association between MG and ECS is unknown, and there are few case reports of MG as a cause of ECS in the literature. Herein, we report a patient who presented with ECS who was diagnosed to be suffering from MG. Case presentation ===== A 67-year-old woman presented to the emergency department with progressive right calf pain that had been progressively worsening for one week. She had undergone amputation of the right lower leg a year ago due to gangrene. She reported decreased movement of the right leg and foot, although she was able to rise from a seated position. She had high blood pressure and had undergone a superficial temporal artery to the middle cerebral artery bypass for an anterior cerebral artery aneurysm nine years ago. She was diagnosed with MG five years ago and was given 60 mg of pyridostigmine bromide daily. She was completely bedridden due to neck weakness. She developed pain in her right lower leg, and her right leg was swollen and painful while walking. She had no history of trauma or infection. On examination
